Late 18th Century Tall Swedish Blue Painted Corner Cabinet

Late 18th century Swedish corner cabinet crafted in pine, standing just under 8' tall. Featuring a beautifully aged and textured painted finish in layered shades of blue and gray. The predominantly blue surface reveals reddish natural pine undertones where generations of use have distressed the paint. Depending on lighting, the finish may appear more blue or gray, giving this traditional Scandinavian cabinet a wonderfully varied appearance.

The upper crown features simple decorative carving and latticework with a distinctive outward-bowing, convex silhouette. Additional carved trim accents the paneled doors while tapered, fluted feet complete the elegant country design.

The cabinet doors retain two functioning locks operated by a single key. Due to age related movement, the doors no longer fit tightly within their frames, and slight gaps are visible at the upper left corners of both right-hand doors. The left door is secured by an interior metal latch.

Inside, the cabinet reveals a contrasting pale blue-gray painted finish with green undertones. Considerable distress to this interior paint creates a layered, timeworn appearance.

Two small curved pine drawers provide convenient storage, with a divided interior in the right drawer. A full-width center shelf, an inward-curving middle shelf, and a narrow notched upper shelf offer additional display and storage. The notched shelf was traditionally used to display family silver spoons and serving utensils.

Signs of age and use include small cracks, scratches, gouges, and wear to the painted surface, particularly around the door locks and frequently handled areas. An old repair is visible along the right side of the middle trim.

Restored, stable, and ready to use. A charming example of late 18th century Swedish country craftsmanship, combining an aged painted finish, decorative carving, and practical corner storage.
