19th Century Small Swedish Pine Sideboard with Original Hand-Painted Drawers

19th century small Swedish sideboard buffet crafted in pine, featuring a wonderfully warm patina and charming original hand-painted folk art decoration along the two upper drawers. The combination of naturally aged pine and faded painted accents gives this compact sideboard authentic Scandinavian country character.

The two upper drawers retain their original painted finish, featuring simple red and white flowers against a faded teal and gray-blue background. Considerable distress is visible around the old metal ring pulls, where generations of handling have worn away portions of the painted decoration. The two ring pulls do not match exactly, and the right pull displays additional wear.

Two lower cabinet doors open to reveal a newer blue painted interior with one shelf, providing convenient enclosed storage. The right cabinet door has shifted somewhat over time and is held in place by an exterior metal latch. A small keyhole remains visible, although no key nor lock are present.

Traditional dovetail joinery reflects the craftsmanship of the period. Despite its compact proportions, the sideboard is substantial and rather heavy for its size. Generations of use are evident in the scratches, stains, and old marks across the top. Age-related separation between wooden planks is visible along the back, interior cabinet bottom, drawer bottoms, and sides. Residual evidence of old dried wormholes is present but is no longer active.

Restored, stable, and ready to use. A delightful example of 19th century Swedish country furniture, combining original hand-painted floral decoration, warm natural pine, and practical storage in a compact cabinet.
